Stress

Daily stress factors, such as danger, high demands and exposure to human misery and death, are contributing factors to a high risk of developing diseases such as cancer, cardiovascular disease and ulcers. Stress, anxiety and depression contribute to obesity due to lack of physical fitness and an unhealthy lifestyle.¹

Metabolic Syndrome

Abnormal work hours and shift work are contributing factors to metabolic syndrome, a combination of symptoms, such as abdominal obesity, hypertension, insulin resistance, stroke and type 2 diabetes. Officers who work nights have a higher risk of metabolic syndrome than those who work days.¹

Heart Disease

Police officers have a high risk of heart attacks. The risk of sudden cardiac death is significantly higher when police are fighting or struggling to restrain people and during pursuits. Plus, three-quarters of police officers have high blood pressure, which may contribute to heart disease as well.²

Physical

Police equipment can weigh up to 20 pounds, which puts a tremendous amount of stress on the back, hips, knees and feet. 8 out of 10 police officers reported they experience lower back pain.³ Wearing a duty belt for a majority of the day can cause lower back pain, as can spending a large portion of the day in a car. Back injuries are the No. 1 reason for claim payouts of disability insurance.⁴

Violence/Dangerous Situations

Officers are faced with a multitude of dangerous situations every day. Violence can occur at any time – during pursuits, responding Code 3 or making an arrest. Dangers include death, increased risk of infectious diseases, and serious and minor trauma, both physical and emotional.

Assaults and injuries

In the last 10 years, there have been an average of 59,000 assaults against law enforcement each year, resulting in 15,400 injuries.⁵ The most common types of injuries are: sprains/strains/soft tissue tears, contusions and lacerations.⁶
